Fan, sb.[1] Add: 5. d. Geol. See quots. and *CONE sb.[1] 1 d. Also attrib. in fan-delta, -terrace.

1864 HAAST Rep. Form. Canterbury Plains 19 The term 'delta' in geology is confined to the alluvial deposits of a river at its mouth, falling either into the sea or into a lake; but thinking that giving such a name to the alluvial accumulations of the rivers in this island, showing some peculiarities, would impart an erroneous impression, Dr. Hector and myself, in drawing up a synopsis of the geological formations of New Zealand, have adopted for the formation of those subaerial accumulations the expression 'Fan', for those of regular water-courses; and of 'Half-cone', for those of intermittent mountain torrents, and we shall for the future use these two expressions. 1873 F. DREW in Q. Jrnl. Geol. Soc. XXIX. 446 At the mouth of each of these [gorges] are alluvial fans, which project out into the flat of the river-alluvium. Ibid. 447 The fan is properly a flat cone, having its apex at the mouth of the ravine. Ibid. 448 The only difference of form between an alluvial fan..and the fan talus sketched in fig. 2 is in the degree of slope. Ibid. 455 The course of events was, that after the formation of that fan the main river lowered its bed, cutting through its own alluvium; this caused the fan-stream to cut through its fan. 1883 H. MILLER in Proc. R. Phys. Soc. VII. 290 Fan Terraces, or Lateral Delta Terraces. 1890 GILBERT in U.S. Geol. Survey Monograph I. 81 footnote, The 'alluvial fan' of Drew is the 'alluvial cone' of American Geologists, and there would be some reason for preferring 'fan' to 'cone' if it were necessary to employ a single term only. It is convenient to use them as synonyms, employing 'cone' when the angle of slope is high and 'fan' when it is low. 1902 in Ld. Avebury Scenery of Eng. 482 The vale of Neath contains a series of such cones or 'fans' of gravel. 1920 Nature CV. 322/2 The wind-worn grains of magnetite brought northward from the great fan-deltas of the Adour system.

When a wire is vibrated torsionally, there is always a displacement of the zero-point to one side or the other, according to the direction of the original torsion; this disturbance requiring hours or even days for its disappearance. If the wire be kept vibrating, however, the molecular friction is greatly increased. 1899 Nature 6 July 239/2 Experiments on an iron wire..showed distinct fatigue of elasticity. 1922 *Glazebrook's Dict. 1866 Cayley Coll. Math. Papers (1892) V. 521 The stationary ineunt, or cusp, considered as..a particular case of the double ineunt, is a spinode; to render this notation symmetrical, we require certain new terms, say link, as the correlative to node, and flex as the correlative to cusp... The ordinary singularities of a plane curve would thus be the node, the cusp, the link, and the flex.

H. G. Hutchinson) 91 The varying 'flicks' or 'whips' of the wrist. Ibid. 112 Two or three long loose strides, two at a trot, and an arm swinging round like a flail, a good length, great pace, and on any wicket at times a considerable flick back from the off.

This operation is several times repeated, with the final result that the last anode (positive plate) has a thick coating of dark brown lead peroxide, while the last kathode (negative plate) is coated mainly with metallic lead of a greyish colour in a porous spongy condition, readily acted on by the SO_4 during discharge. Textual Emend.* 50 The homœoteleuton and *homœarchon of these lines has led to omission. 1897 Nature 27 May 94/1 Mr. Blandford exhibited and discussed series of *homœochromatic..species of butterflies. 1899 D. Sharp Camb. Nat. Hist. VI. 337 It is found that in certain localities the colour of various butterflies more or less agrees, while it differs from that of the same butterflies found in other localities...This phenomenon is now called '*homœochromatism'. 1903 Athenæum 24 Oct. 552/1 These..he suggested were probable examples of homœochromatism. 1893 W. N. Parker & H. Rönnfeldt tr. Weismann's Germ-Plasm Introd. 34 These kinds of division we may speak of as *homœokinesis and heterokinesis. 1890 Billings Med. Dict., Homœoplasia*, development of a similar or normal tissue; hyperplasia. 1902 J. M. Baldwin's Dict. Philos. & Psychol. II. 155/2 When a cell has but a single variety of processes it is called *homoipodal, as contrasted to heteropodal. 1890 Smithsonian Rep. 411 These phenomena, which are numerous and active in animals of the higher class (*homeotherms), are much less so in cold-blooded animals. 1889 Wingrave T. Dunman's Gloss. Anat. App., Homœothermic*, of even temperature: applied to warm-blooded animals which maintain the same temperature, irrespective of that of the surrounding medium. 1890 Smithsonian Rep. 407 Man, mammals, and birds are called creatures of equable temperature, homeothermic.

Homœomorph. Add: b. A species similar to another in general aspect, but dissimilar in detail. Hence Ho·mœomo·rphic a., of a similar type or substance. Ho·mœomo·rphy, (a) see quot. 1899; (b) Mus., imitation.

1899 S. Buckman in Proc. Cotteswold Nat. Field Club (1901) XIII. 232 What is known as mimicry in the animal kingdom is of course one phase of homœomorphy. Ibid. 262 Some of the more remarkable homœomorphs. Ibid., The various Terebratulæ, which are really homœomorphous developments. a 1909 Buck's Handbk. Med. Sci. IV. 660 (Cent. D. Suppl.) Either homœomorphic, i.e., of the same order, or heteromorphic, of different type. 1930 Music & Lett. Oct. 395 The phenomenon of homeomorphy is dealt with! In musical language it is termed imitation.

Homœosis (hǫmi¸ōu·sis). Biol. Also homoiosis. [mod. L. homœosis, ad. Gr. ὁμοίωσις a becoming like, f. ὅμοιος like.] (See quot. 1909.) So Homœotic (hǫmip·tik) a., characterized by homœosis.

1890 Billings Med. Dict., Homoiosis, assimilation. 1894 W. Bateson Study of Variation 85 For the word 'Metamorphy' I therefore propose to substitute the term Homœosis. Ibid., The distinction between Homœotic Variation and strictly Meristic Variation is sufficiently obvious. 1902 Encycl. Brit. XXV. 692/1 Homœosis is the making of a merome into the likeness of one belonging to another metamere, and is the opposite of the process of 'heterosis'. 1909 R. H. Lock Variation, Heredity, & Evol. v. 133 Homœosis consists in the assumption by one member of a meristic series of the form or character proper to another member of the same series. 1913 W. Bateson Mendel's Princ. Heredity 198 A simple homœosis of the stamens and carpels.

Homogamous, a. Add: c. Evolution. Of or pertaining to assortative mating. So Homogamy (b) Evol., the interbreeding among individuals having similar characteristics; sexual selection. Homo·gamic a.

1903 Biometrika Nov. 481 If the male class of a given character tends to mate with a female class with generally like character, we have a tendency to homogamy. Ibid., The whole range of effect from pure random matings to perfectly homogamous unions within a population is almost but not quite as important as the difference between self and cross fertilization in plants. 1907 Fabian News XVII. 55/2 Professor Pearson's theory of homogamic mating.

Homogeneous, a. Add:

3. Math. Homogeneous co-ordinates, a system in which the ratios of the co-ordinates (one more than necessary) are substituted for the co-ordinates themselves, making the equations (all except one) homogeneous.

1882 H. Cox in Q. Jrnl. Pure & Appl. Math. XVIII. 178 Homogeneous Coordinates in Imaginary Geometry and their Application to Systems of Forces.

Homoiousion (hǫmoi¸au·ziǫn, -au·siǫn). Theol. [eccl. Gr. ὁμοιούσιον: see Homoiousian and cf. *Homoousion.] The homoiousion, the term used to express the doctrine that the Son is of like substance with the Father.

1875, a 1901 [see *Homoousion].

Homoousion (hǫmo¸au·ziǫn, -au·siǫn). Theol. [eccl. Gr. ὁμοούσιον, acc. of ὁμοούσιος, qualifying acc. νἱον son (as in the Nicene Creed): see Homoousian.] The homoousion (τὸ ὁμοούσιον): the term ὁμοούσιος as used, e.g. in the formula promulgated by the Council of Nicæa in 325 A.D., to express the doctrine that the Son is 'of one substance' with the Father (τῷ πατρί); the doctrine itself: opposed to the term ὁμοιούσιος (see *Homoiousion). The nom. form homoousios is also used.

1781 Gibbon Decl. & F. xxi, Their [sc. the Arians'] patron, Eusebius of Nicomedia,..confessed, that the admission of the Homoousion, or Consubstantial..was incompatible with the principles of their theological system. Ibid., The mysterious Homoousion, which either party was free to interpret according to their peculiar tenets. 1833 J. H. Newman Arians iv. § 3. 333 The Novatians, as maintaining the Homoousion, were included in the persecution. 1875 Encycl. Brit. II. 538/2 At length the tenet of the Homoiousion was substituted for that of the Homoousion at the Council of Rimini (Ariminum) in 360. a 1901 W. Bright Age of the Fathers (1903) I. 248 Socrates's statement..places the adoption of the Homoiousion, as a substitute for the Homoousion, at least three years too late. 1910 Encycl. Brit. II. 543/2 The opposition to the Homoousios, as a formula..not borne out by Holy Writ. Ibid. 825/2 The catch-word Homousios. 1921 C. H. Turner Catholic & Apostolic (1931) 129 The very existence of Christianity in any full sense of the term was at stake over the Homoousion. Ibid. 130 The confession of belief expressed in the Homoousion was, in his conviction as in ours, the only possible issue of the original premisses of Christian teaching.

Homosexual (hǫmo¸se·ksiuăl), a. (sb.). [irreg. f. Homo- + Sexual.] Pertaining to or characterized by sexual propensity for one's own sex. Also sb. one who has such a propensity. Hence Ho·mosexua·lity [G. homosexualität, Benkert]; Homose·xualize v. trans., to make homosexual.

1897 H. Havelock Ellis Stud. Psychol. Sex I. 1 Burton's climatic theory of homosexuality. Note, 'Homosexual' is a barbarously hybrid word, and I claim no responsibility for it. 1902 J. M. Baldwin's Dict. Philos. & Psychol. II. 287/1 A special case is inversion or homosexuality. 1912 E. Paul tr. A. Moll's Sexual Life of Child 125 The primary appearance of homosexual inclinations does not prove that these inclinations are congenital. Ibid. 127 An adult homosexual who as a child once did some needlework for a joke. 1914 G.
